A group of men wielding elemental magic. It was the stuff of fairytales. The local fables of Barandor. The Sect of Seven wasn't supposed to be real. Seventeen-year-old Fura Feuer thought she was already living in the midst of fantasy, working as a firedancer at her local renaissance festival since she was thirteen. How was she to know that that was only the beginning? When her home burns to the ground one night, she's forced to find refuge with the only other family she's ever known – her fellow workers in Pyropheric. Yet, as she follows them into the night, she begins to realize that there's more to the group, and the leader she's idolized for years, than she thought. Finding herself in another realm, it isn't long before she ends up on a journey with a man who acts as if he hates her. She'll discover that darkness lies ahead, for the Nyte-Fyre Prophecy has been unleashed... All she wanted was a place to stay, what she got was a trip of a lifetime.

Tragedy, myth, and magic intertwine in the first novel of a new fantasy series.
